Windows Explorer has come a long way, with many new features and improvements over the years. While you can still get quite a lot done with Explorer, there are always new additions that are needed. This is where Accessibility Center comes in, with the Windows 7 Update. Windows 7 Update, or the Windows Mobility Center, actually brings functionality from the Accessibility Center to the main Windows 7 dialog. It makes many adjustments to the Windows Mobility Center, with the assistance of the Windows Mobility Center Feedback app. What's it about? Windows Mobility Center doesn't work the same way with Windows 7 as it did with Windows Vista, and it's for that very reason, among others, why it's brought back. It's not simply a subset of the Accessibility Center – it is the Accessibility Center in its entirety. It brings back the feature of being able to quickly enable or disable all of the accessibility features, for instance. Let's start with the basics. Windows Mobility Center Feedback The Windows 7 Update brings the feedback option which is available in the Accessibility Center. It's a simple feedback tool that lets you to provide feedback about the current Mobility Center experience. The feedback you provide can be sent directly to Microsoft. It's rather easy to use, and involves pressing the feedback button, as seen in the screenshot above. An easy process with Feedback. For instance, you can provide feedback on features, such as a loud button, or if a particular menu item should be collapsed. Microsoft will then take care of the feedback process, which is scheduled to arrive in Windows 7 Update. The Windows Mobility Center now offers these feedback options. Windows Mobility Center Feedback Windows Mobility Center Feedback is a new feature that's made it into the Windows 7 Update. It's a simple tool that's part of the Windows Mobility Center Feedback app. Windows Mobility Center Feedback app The Windows Mobility Center Feedback app isn't mandatory, but it's easy to use, and will help you to provide feedback about the current Windows Mobility Center experience. No more hunting for the feedback button in the Windows Mobility Center. Just follow the instructions, and provide feedback to Microsoft. When considering the accessibility options that are available for an individual with a disability, it's important to get an overview of all of the various options that are out there, as well as look at how they all work
