Epstein-Barr virus (EBV)-positive and EBV-negative non-Hodgkin's lymphoma are associated with distinct intracellular signaling pathways. Alterations in signaling through the B-cell antigen receptor result in B-cell hyperactivation and altered susceptibility to apoptosis. Lymphoma cells from patients with the B-cell lymphoma, Epstein-Barr virus (EBV)-associated gastric carcinoma (EBV-GC), show a novel pattern of constitutive phosphorylation of signaling proteins. However, the molecular basis for this unusual phenotype is poorly understood. Therefore, we analyzed the phosphorylation status of B-cell signaling intermediates in EBV-positive and EBV-negative non-Hodgkin's lymphoma (NHL), and compared the protein phosphorylation patterns of these two tumor types to those found in EBV-GC. Signaling intermediates were examined by Western blotting in NHL cell lines that had been infected with a recombinant EB
