But how? I tried it with an emulator but it is not the same thing. A: Installing on a device, this is what I do. The process will be the same as installing on emulator, except that you will need to download the .apk file and install it to the device using your PC. To do this, first locate the device you want to test on, once located, download the .apk file from the app's Google Play page. Then you can either go to your android SDK directory (on Windows: C:\Program Files (x86)\Android\android-sdk\) and execute the adb.exe file located inside the adb_usb directory. Or if you want to use your android device to do all the stuff, you can go to the "adb devices" command to see all the device's connected to your PC. You will then see a row with the connected device in question. Type "adb install [file name] [device id]" and it should install the app to the device, without using any installation wizard (for some reason, adb install does not take care of all the files in the .apk file). Q: Can I use Newton's laws in the absence of gravity? I know Newton's second law of motion in the presence of a gravitational field is: $\mathbf{F} = m \cdot \dot{\mathbf{v}}$ But what if there is no gravitational field and instead I have the external force: $\mathbf{F} = m \cdot \dot{\mathbf{v}} + \mathbf{F}_{int}$ What is the corresponding force equation? A: It is just Newton's second law: $\mathbf{F} = m \cdot \dot{\mathbf{v}} + \mathbf{F}_{int}$ You simply omit the gravitational force in the equation, as the gravitational force is very small compared to all other forces.
